

Where Are They Now?

Manager of the Language Service

Marina Gomes

When I first came to Britain from Brazil, I found a job in a Language School – first as a receptionist and later as a Brazilian Portuguese teacher. After a year, I was promoted to the position of Centre Manager of the busiest branch of the College in Central London.

Since my arrival here, I also took courses at The Mary Ward Centre in Community Interpreting and Community Translation and other related courses elsewhere.

I am now the manager of The Language Service at Finfuture in Finsbury Park. I have more than achieved the target I was set at the beginning, for example we have trained 45 bilingual residents in the past three years. I really enjoy this job, because it enables people to develop their skills and careers. It has been very rewarding to make a difference to the lives of so many people, since I started managing the Language Service.
